National Geographic Society Describes Important Village on the Austrian Frontier.

The latest lesson in geography prepared by the National Geographic Society deals with Grado, the Austrian frontier port recently brought behind the Italian lines in their drive on Trieste:

"Grado is the port of Aquileia, situated on the Island and dunes at the outermost edge of the Venetian lagoon. It is a more important village today than the city that it formerly served and once bitterly rivaled. Grado, at the products of its sardine and conserving factories enjoy a bright reputation in northern Italy and along the west Adriatic, while they are favor. , ably known as far in the interior as Vienna.

Founded in 452 A. D.

"Grado was founded in 452 A. D. as a naval harbor, when Aquileia became a naval station in the tottering Roman empire. After the fall of the empire Grado came under the power of the Venetian Republic. There followed generations of rivalry between Grado and Aquileia-the two cities are about seven miles apart-this struggle representing the struggle of the empire against Venice. From 575 to 1451, Grado was the seat of a patriarchate, later removed to Venice. It still pos-sesses a cathedral built in 456 by the Patriarch Niceta.

Develops Fishing Industry. "Grado has a well developed fishing industry that largely gives employ-ment to its 3,500 inhabitants. It is a square town, with narrow streets, picuresque buildings, numerous courtyards, and many testimonials of orighter bygone days. It is built on one of the island chain that stretches from the mouth of the Isonzo to that of the Brenta, toward Venice. Many of its present buildings are slight huts of reeds, the homes of its Adriatic of reeds, the hones fishermen.

"Most of the people of Grado are Italian-speaking. During recent years the city has developed a certain interest as a watering place."
